Anchoring in the Time of Storms

“Fearing that we would be dashed against the rocks, they dropped four anchors from the stern and prayed for daylight.” Acts 27:29

When a winter storm began to toss their vessel, sailors aboard that old ship, hearing the creaking and groaning of the timbers, feared their ship would break up. After all, things like that happened. They were off an island in the midst of the stormy Mediterranean. It looked grim. A doctor on board wrote the log of the voyage. "Hope of our being saved," he wrote, "was gradually abandoned." At midnight they were about to be driven on the rocks when Luke the physician wrote, "We cast four anchors out of the ship and wished for day."

The Corona Virus pandemic of 2019 and 2020 is a storm the likes of which this Earth has not seen in a long time no pun intended. This silent storm has engendered fear that knows no bounds. We find ourselves like Luke, the Apostle Paul and the men on that ship fearing for their very lives. And, like the men on that ship a long time ago we need to cast faith anchors – anchors that will guide us through this storm we're facing.

Dr. Harold Sala, founder of "Guidelines" provides four anchors that hold us together. He writes, "The first anchor that will strengthen us in the storm is the anchor of God's Word, the Bible. The Bible is something like a chart that depicts the unknown, sometimes uncharted, sea of life. It tells you that your destination can be the haven of rest, and that Christ is a lighthouse that will direct you safely to the haven you seek. Jesus said, "I am the way and the truth and the life. No one comes to the Father except through me" (John 14:6). Contrary to what we would like to think, everyone who sails the sea of life does not end up in the haven of rest, described as heaven by the Bible. Scores of men are shipwrecked and their souls are lost in the voyage."

"The second anchor, which can give you stability, is faith in Jesus Christ. The Bible says that faith in Christ is an anchor of the soul that is sure and steadfast. In the language of the sea, when a person walks with Christ, He stands beside him and walks with him or her in the storm. It is when you turn the helm over to Christ and let Him give you guidance and direction that you can rest peacefully – knowing that He will see you through the dark night. Contrary to what many think, God never promised to give you immediate deliverance from the storm, but He did promise to go with you, to be there in the night hour, and to deliver you from the wrath of the troubles which could destroy you.”

“On January 17, 1912, five men reached the South Pole. Edward Wilson, an M.D., was one of them. On the return trip of 800 miles, one man collapsed and died more than halfway back. One more went out and gallantly met death on the ice; the other three kept on until they were 11 miles from safety and there perished. Later their bodies and diaries were recovered. Edward Wilson wrote in his diary, "So I live knowing that I am in God's hands to be used to bring others to Him... We must do what we can and leave the rest to Him. My trust is in God, so that it matters not what I do or where I go." That was a man who had made faith a powerful anchor.”

“The third anchor is that of prayer. This anchor is very powerful and should be used always – not just when you are in trouble!! Learn that prayer can be a powerful anchor – not just to keep you from being thrown on the rocks – but to open the door to the blessings and presence of God.”

“Finally, there is the anchor of providence. Sometimes God allows the winds to blow so you realize our need of Him. Cast out four anchors and ride out the storm in your life.”

Dr. Sala’s words written in 2016 for Guidelines ring true in every storm of life. We will get through this storm as well. I’m reminded of a song George Beverly Shea sang a long time ago “In Times Like These.” “In times like these, you need an anchor,” he sings. The last verse and refrain are: “In times like these I have a Savior. In times like these I have an anchor. I’m very sure, I’m very sure my anchor holds and grips the Solid Rock! This Rock is Jesus, Yes He’s the One. This Rock is Jesus, the only One. Be very sure, be very sure – Your anchor holds and grips the Solid Rock!”

THE WOMEN'S GROUP DOES NOT MEET DURING THE SUMMER MONTHS BUT HOPEFULLY WE CAN LOOK FORWARD TO PLANS FOR SEPTEMBER THROUGH MAY 2021. If this proposed agenda changes everyone will be notified of the schedule. All ladies in the community are always welcome for an experience of learning and warm fellowship. Your presence is valued.

WOMEN'S BIBLE STUDY meets on Wednesday's at 9:30 am in the Bluebonnet Room. Arrive at 9:15 and enjoy fellowship.

BIBLE STUDY is also cancelled until further notice. Start-up date will be announced and another amazing study of the book by Max Lucado, "UNSHAKABLE HOPE" will begin. In this book you will focus on the promises of God. Since His promises are unbreakable, your hope will be unshakable. The winds will still blow, the rain will still fall, challenges will continue, but in the end you will be standing, standing on the promises of God.

Hope is hard to come by these days. We need the definitive declarations of our mighty and loving God. Is your life built on the circumstances of life or the promises of God?

Standing on the promises that cannot fail,
When the howling storms of doubt and fear assail,
By the living Word of God I shall prevail,
Standing on the promises of God.

May each of you stay healthy and in touch with one another. This is a time for prayer.

Blessings to all. Lil

Gentlemen,

I am struggling with the stay-at-home directive. I am ready to make visits to Home Depot to buy things needed for home projects which are on hold because they are not important enough to violate the rules for safe health. Like most of you, I am in the high-risk category and thus follow the practices to minimize my risk. We have not had a person in our house since early February and do not expect to allow anyone to come indoors until after the crisis subsides in the next few months. Notice, I did not say CURE! I expect we will continue to have virus around for some time and will have to find a balance between health and people going back to work and some social activities. When our daughter from Cedar Park comes to visit, we meet with her in the driveway.

We will need to consider the future of Men' Breakfast. There may be a limit of group size for an extended period which will make it difficult to carry on with Men's Breakfast unless we adopt some rules to meet Social Spacing guidelines.

Certainly, we all enjoy the fellowship and I certainly miss the opportunity to visit with all of you.

When he was at the table with them, he took bread, gave thanks, broke it and began to give it to them. Then their eyes were opened and they recognized him and he disappeared from their sight. LUKE 24:30-31.

The table is a great place to take part in mindful conversation. We all need food and drink to survive, but our daily bread involves so much more than we put into our stomach. The thoughts and feelings filling our hearts are every bit as important.

The Road Ahead With COVID-19

By Brenda Goodman, MA

April 21, 2020 -- Are we there yet? As Americans have spent weeks at home, growing shaggy -- and glassy-eyed, staring at screens -- no question is more pressing to our health and economic well-being: Can we come out now?

Within the next few weeks, many cities and states will deem it safe enough to lift stay-at-home orders. People will once again be able to return to some normal activities.

But for the next few years, life will not look the way we remember. We'll talk to each other behind sheets of Plexiglas, behind face masks, with well-scrubbed hands that carry the astringent smell of hand sanitizer. We'll continue to walk and work 6 feet apart. Meetings will be Zoomed. This summer will go on more quietly than usual, without the roar of crowds in stadiums, or at concerts.

Coronavirus in Context: Why We Truly Need to Practice Physical Distancing

Today's episode of Coronavirus in Context dives into what social distancing is, how long we should practice this public health protocol, and its benefits.

ABOUT

Some states have already begun this process, often before they met criteria outlined in new national guidelines the White House released last week.

Those guidelines advise states to wait to ease restrictions until they've seen a downward trend of COVID-19 cases for 2 weeks and have enough hospital capacity to treat patients without crisis care.

In South Carolina, Gov. Henry McMaster said cities could reopen public beaches, and he relaxed restrictions on some retailers, allowing many to reopen as long as they limit the number of customers that can be in a store at any given time. He stopped short of reopening businesses where close contact is unavoidable, like hair and nail salons and gyms.

Across the border in Georgia, Gov. Brian Kemp went even further, giving barbershops, bowling alleys, nail salons, tattoo parlors, and fitness centers the green light to open their doors again by the end of the week, provided they monitor workers for illness and take other precautions. He also said elective surgeries could resume. Restaurants could reopen a few days later, provided they also follow social distancing guidelines.

Other states have taken a different approach. On April 14, Gov. Gavin Newsom outlined a six-point plan for how he would weigh the decision to lift stay-at-home orders in California, which is flattening the curve of its COVID-19 infections. Newsom said he wouldn't even begin to consider a timeline to restart until the state had increased testing, shored up its public health system and hospitals, and had carefully studied the available data. He declined to discuss timing until at least the first week of May.

"Let's not make the mistake of pulling the plug too early as much as we all want to," Newsom said at a news conference.

He did fill in a few details. There will be no crowded events in California for the foreseeable future.

"Large-scale events that bring in hundreds, thousands, tens of thousands of strangers is not in the cards, based on our current guidelines and current expectations," Newsom said.

That could change if doctors find an effective treatment or a vaccine.

He said officials were also thinking about how kids might return to school in the fall safely. Newsom said they were thinking about staggering student arrivals so some would come in the morning, others in the afternoon. They were also rethinking how to serve food to a large group of kids and do P.E. They're thinking about how to clean schools -- "massive deep cleaning," he said. All of those details would be forthcoming, Newsom promised, "for reintroducing a semblance of normalcy, which is I recognize is anything but in the short run."

Pulling the plug too early, with many infections undetected in the community, could mean a spike in cases, the possibility of overwhelming hospitals, more economic pain, and preventable deaths.

"This virus is not going anywhere," said John Lynch, MD, an infectious disease specialist and associate medical director at Harborview Medical Center in Seattle. “There’s a distinct risk that we will just bump straight back up and see a brisk increase in infections, and we have to be able to respond to that,” he said at a recent news conference sponsored by the Infectious Diseases Society of America.

The Rough Road Ahead

Infectious disease experts estimate that between 50% and 66% of Americans will need to have protective antibodies against the virus before life might once again look the way we remember. Fifty to 66% is the range that may provide all-important herd immunity, so the virus doesn’t spread through the population, infecting vulnerable people. The safest way to reach that level of immunity is with a vaccine, which is still months and perhaps years away.

Until a vaccine is available, communities will be traveling a difficult road, says Carlos del Rio, MD, an infectious disease expert at Emory University School of Medicine in Atlanta.

“When you’re driving down a difficult road, sometimes you accelerate and sometimes you have to hit the brakes in order not to crash,” he says.

“There’s going to be a back-and-forth happening, and for that, you’re going to need a lot of good data, a lot of good surveillance. That’s why I say testing is critically important, because you’re going to have to have testing data to make those decisions,” del Rio says.

As states reopen, they will need to closely monitor what happens to infections in their communities to stem the spread of new infections. That’s a public health strategy called containment. Containment of infectious disease relies on the ability to do three things: test, trace, and isolate. That means lots of testing to know who is sick; contact tracing, so that you can track, inform, and quarantine everyone exposed; and finally, you need to be able to isolate contagious people to keep them from infecting others.

In many communities, these key capabilities are not yet in place.

Moving back to containment also means people will have to accept more responsibility for their own health by making sure to wear face masks, wash their hands often, and stay home when sick.

‘Massive Amounts’ of Testing Still Needed

In order to have enough data, experts say, we’ll need to be testing people on a scale not yet seen in this country.

“We’ve never stuck swabs up people’s noses at the volume that we’re talking about,” says del Rio.

Coronavirus in Context: Immunology Expert Discusses Testing, Antibodies, and More

An immunology expert describes various tests for coronavirus, whether we’re immune to COVID-19 after infection, and more.

ABOUT

For example, in the week ending April 13, the U.S. tested about 1 million people, or 0.3% of the population. In order to catch new infections and tamp them down, experts estimate we will need to perform at least three times that many tests. A range of testing estimates gathered by the Kaiser Family Foundation suggests the U.S. will need to test between 3 million and 161 million people each week to manage the epidemic.

“We need to have massive amounts of testing,” says Rochelle Walensky, MD, chief of infectious diseases at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

She says that as the U.S. goes back to work, we’ll need to test anybody with any symptoms at all. We’ll also need to be testing certain people regularly, even if they don’t have symptoms, such as people living in group homes and long-term care facilities, where the risk of spread is great.

“We should probably be testing teachers once a week when the kids are back in school. We should be testing restaurant workers once a week and subway workers once a week. Those people have frequent contact with many people, and we can't afford to be wrong," Walensky says.

Vice President Mike Pence recently told NBC's Chuck Todd that the U.S. has enough testing capacity for any state to start to lift stay-at-home orders.

Maryland's governor, Larry Hogan, disagrees. Frustrated by the shortage of tests in his state, the governor, a Republican, recently negotiated with South Korea to purchase half a million tests. "We can't open up our states without ramping up testing," he told *The New York Times*.

Experts Call for an Army of Contact Tracers

Once an infected person is found, public health departments will have to pick up the careful and time-consuming work of finding and notifying each person they could have infected. That's called contact tracing.

"Contact tracing can prevent a single case from becoming an outbreak, and an outbreak from becoming an epidemic," says former CDC Director Tom Frieden, MD, who is now president and chief executive officer at the nonprofit Resolve to Save Lives.

U.S. health departments don't have enough staff to do contact tracing on the scale that will be needed.

China, for example, traced more than 720,000 contacts during its epidemic. For that effort, they used 1,800 contact-tracing teams, which had five members each.

To do something similar here, Frieden believes we might need "an army" of 300,000 trained contact tracers.

The National Association of County and City Health Officials has come up with another estimate. NACCHO says that at a minimum, states will need an additional 100,000 contact tracers to handle the surge of cases we are bound to see as the nation gets moving again. Those contact tracers are needed even if states also turn to trained volunteers like the medical reserve corps, and make use of new technologies like smartphone apps. NACCHO is asking the federal government for $3.7 billion in emergency funding to support those efforts.

Some states, like hard-hit Massachusetts, have announced partnerships with nonprofits to quickly scale up their contact tracing. There, the Department of Public Health will work with an organization called Partners in Health to hire and train nearly 1,000 people to support contact tracing and case management there.

Tech-heavy California plans to train a mix of paid professionals and volunteers working with AmeriCorps to do this work, Newsom said. They are also considering using smartphone features and apps to expand their capacity to trace people.

Quarantines Continue to Stem Spread

Once contacts are identified, they need to be quarantined for at least 14 days. Many people will be able to do this at home, but home is risky, especially if there are many people living in close quarters.

In China, for example, 75% of transmissions of new infectious happened within households.

"That's why in China, if you were found to be positive, they took you away from the house and put you in a sort of infirmary," del Rio says. "Obviously we're not going to do that in this country."

He says in order for isolation to work properly here, we're going to need to support families by giving them protective gear like masks, and teaching them how to keep uninfected family members safe.

We also need to have quarantine options for people who are homeless, or who aren't safe to isolate at home. Del Rio gives an example of a patient he saw recently who was infected with the virus.

"He lived in a two-bedroom apartment with four other guys. Less than 1,000 square feet. How quickly do you think they're going to get infected? Very quickly," he says.

For living situations like that, del Rio says, we need alternative housing, like designated dorm rooms, to help keep people safe. We'll also need to protect their incomes if that means they can't earn a living. If we can't find safe, supportive accommodations for the most vulnerable members of our communities, he says, it's going to be hard to convince people to get tested as often as they need to be. The cycle will continue, and this virus will be with us for a long time.

Prayer Corner

A Prayer Amid an Epidemic
By Kerry Weber

Jesus Christ, you traveled through towns and villages “curing every disease and illness.” At your command, the sick were made well. Come to our aid now, in the midst of the global spread of the coronavirus, that we may experience your healing love. Heal those who are sick with the virus. May they regain their strength and health through quality medical care. Heal us from our fear, which prevents nations from working together and neighbors from helping one another. Heal us from our pride, which can make us claim invulnerability to a disease that knows no borders. Jesus Christ, healer of all, stay by our side in this time of uncertainty and sorrow. Be with those who have died from the virus.

May they be at rest with you in your eternal peace. Be with the families of those who are sick or have died. As they worry and grieve, defend them from illness and despair. May they know your peace. Be with the doctors, nurses, researchers and all medical professionals who seek to heal and help those affected and who put themselves at risk in the process. May they know your protection and peace. Be with the leaders of all nations. Give them the foresight to act with charity and true concern for the well-being of the people they are meant to serve. Give them the wisdom to invest in long-term solutions that will help prepare for or prevent future outbreaks. May they know your peace, as they work together to achieve it on earth. Whether we are home or abroad, surrounded by many people suffering from this illness or only a few, Jesus Christ, stay with us as we endure and mourn, persist and prepare. In place of our anxiety, give us your peace.

Jesus Christ, heal us.
